would not raise a rebellion, are willing to shirk their share of the public burdens. When, there. fore, nullification promised, in the spirit of Jack that there should be no taxes, it appealed to a passion which listens readily to any reason-ing. In 1834, the period of ten years, during ch the emigrants were to be exempt from enstom-house duties, expired, and the General Government proceeded to apply the custome regulations to Texas as to other parts of the republic. But at the instigation and under ead of the intruders and conspirators from the United States, the collector was seized and imprisoned, the custom houses closed, and the shameful indignity of flogging inflicted upon a captain in the Mexican army, stationed with a all detachment at Anahuac, for the purpose of sustaining the civil authority. Disaffection and sedition were not, however, universal. They owed their origin and most of their force to the corrupt intriguers and disorganiizers who had come "to sow rebellion," and were determined by every means to which they could lay hands and tongues, to compromise the peace of the cantry "beyond the possibility of recal." "Thee corporation of the town of Liberty issued an ordinance to sustain the revenue officers and guard at Galveston bay, recommending to all chants to pay the duties and conform to the laws, without discussing those matters with All the industrious farmers, shopkeepers, and other orderly persons, were in favor of peace; but the swindling land speculators, the officeseekers, the ambitious and rapacious, strove to excite the whole country to rebellion." CATASTROPHE.

The night was dark, the wind was high, And howled most piteously; High in the air my wig did fly, A grievous loss to me.

The hair from off my head was gone,

And the wind now was calm;
Of all men I was most fortom;
Until I tried your Balm.
A precious Balm it was to me,
It did my hair elate,
And in the glass I sometimes see,
My once divested pate.

My once divested pate.

Now on my head are glossy curis,
In ringlets fine and brown:
In strongest winds my hair unfarts,
But does not leave my crown.

Brild headed man, I oft exclaim,
When such I chance to meet,
A Balm is sold, a, precious Balm,
